The Ethnic Neighborhood—Can it Survive?

What values do ethnic neighborhoods have to offer to America?

Why is neighborhood life important if our cities are to survive?

What problems do ethnic neighborhoods face?

What has been the historic role of the church in ethnic communities?

Ethnic communities, often overlooked in the search for solutions to urban concerns, may provide a key to understanding what is happening to our cities, and why neighborhood life is important if our cities are to survive.

Many ethnic neighborhoods are struggling to keep alive, to keep their values in the midst of overwhelming change.

A film by Alexandra and David Peeler.

Produced for the Catholic Conference on Ethnic and Neighborhood Affairs in cooperation with the National Center for Urban Ethnic Affairs.

The ethnic community and its traditions have in the past been intimately bound with the local parish church.

What is the changing role of the urban ethnic church? What can churches do about urban neighborhood survival?

This important, new, 16 mm color documentary captures the flavor of the immigrant past, and goes beyond to show the dynamics of contemporary ethnic communities now groping with the harsh realities of urban America.

It focuses on the forces affecting urban neighborhoods and how some ethnic communities through parish leadership are beginning to deal with these outside forces.

The film documents the cultural pride inherent in the ethnic communities and their struggle against the highways, banks, realtors, and official policies that often destroy viable neighborhoods in the name of progress.
